

Another Celebrity Takes a Fall

Edward Norton recovers after falling from a horse during filming for the movie "The Painted Veil."

Edward Norton claims he's fine now. Surgery wasn't required. Rest, massages and swimming are helping him recover.

Like many civilians who ride, celebrities also take a tumble now and then from their mounts. In 2006 both Madonna and Matthew Broderick fell from horses and both suffered broken collar bones. Now, two-time Oscar-nominated actor Edward Norton broke three vertebrae during a riding accident on the set of his current film, "The Painted Veil." Much of the film was shot in China.

Just before filming began for a horseback scene, Norton began galloping the animal. It isn't certain whether the horse tossed Norton or he merely slipped off, but he ended up with what seemed like a wrenched back. A trip to a doctor in Hong Kong revealed that he had fractured three thoracic vertebrae.
