

HorseChannel Newswire

Classes for recognizing horse abuse and neglect will be offered in northern Kentucky; Equine vet speaks out against FEI's rollkur decision; Pennsylvania couple makes movie inspired by their Gypsy horse

March 4, 2010

Equine Welfare

Clermont County horse abuse case spurs NKY classes

In the Bluegrass state where people love horses, lots of people want to have their own. From Cincinnati.com. Read more >>

Another man charged in wild-horse shooting

A Calgary-area man has been charged shooting a wild horse in southern Alberta last year. From CBC News. Read more >>

FEI's Rollkur decision a 'missed opportunity' for reform

An equine veterinarian says the FEI has missed an opportunity for reform in its recent decision over hyperflexion. From Horsetalk. Read more >>

Kill pen owner testifies to taking Paragallo's horses

A Bainbridge horse farmer testified Tuesday that horses delivered from Center Brook Farm in Climax were in a seriously malnourished condition. From The Daily Mail. Read more >>

In Other News

Local women use horses to heal

There is something about Sheryl Kress-Griffin's miniature horses that can heal the soul. From The Wisconsin Jewish Chronicle. Read more >>

Couple realizes dream of making big movie about rare equine breed

Not long ago, a couple in rural Chester County, Pa., - Sue Rathbone and Ed Fitts - finished making a movie about their pet. From The Miami Herald. Read more >>

Yesterday's News >>